Facts For Educators

Family Involvement in School-Based Mental Health

Educators who understand that families generally are the ones most knowledgeable about their own children will be more likely to find a returned respect and spirit of collaboration with families. Educators who consult with families regarding concerns they may have about a child's mental health will benefit from family input and mutual collaboration. Teachers and other school personnel who are more informed about both family involvement in schools and children's mental health will be more likely to have success in teaching children with mental health needs. It has been established that children have greater academic success when families are involved in schools. Children with mental health disabilities certainly have the same, if not a greater need for their families and educators to work together. Educators who can approach families in a non judgmental and cooperative spirit are more likely to have success in working with the child with mental health needs.

Why is this important?

- Children have more school success when families are involved in their education
- Positive family and staff interaction help to achieve overall positive school climate
- Schools with strong family involvement see greater student achievement
- School staff and families who work collaboratively for a student will be more likely to have student cooperation

What can educators do about it?

- Educate yourself about mental health diagnoses in children and adolescents
- Work in a spirit of mutual respect and cooperation with families to insure success for every child in school
- Adopt positive and effective communication strategies with all families
- Refer children to a mental health professional in your school if you have concerns
- Contact families with concerns about their child
- Refer families to support and advocacy groups if the family requests that you do so
